1 CONFERENCE OVERVIEW

- Dates: May 2-4 2010
- Venue: Palacio de Congresos de Córdoba, Spain
- Theme: Religious Freedom in Democratic Societies
- Hosts: Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Cooperation, Ministry of Justice, Ministry of Interior of Spain
- Sponsors: Spanish Government and UN Alliance of Civilizations

Our program will be open with a cocktail reception offered by the Cordoba Mayor in The Alcazar Gardens in the evening of Sunday May 2nd. This will be a good opportunity for delegates and experts to meet in a unique setting.

In the morning of May 3rd, we have two plenary sessions, the official opening and a plenary session with a round table followed by an interactive debate. These two sessions will be open to special guests and the press.

The Expert section of the Conference restricted to official delegates and experts invited begins with a working lunch followed, in the afternoon, by four panel's sessions working simultaneously in different rooms.

Our cultural proposal for the evening is a visit to the Cathedral-former Mosque.

On Tuesday May 4th, the program starts with a wrap-up session followed by a plenary session where the rapporteurs will present the main outcomes of each panel to the Conference before the closing ceremony.

2 CONCEPT PAPER

Democracy and rule of law provide the ideal political framework for exercising freedom of religion and conscience, for the exercise of faith and pluralism of creeds. Religion is a valuable complement to democratic society, because of its commitment to ethical values, role in social cohesion, and cultural dimension. A good example of this can be found in the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, which recognises in its Preamble that Europe's cultural, religious, and humanist heritage is an inspiration for the universal values of inviolable and inalienable rights of the individual, freedom, democracy, equality, and rule of law.

More specifically, in Article 17 of the Lisbon Treaty, the status of churches and religious associations or communities is respected under national law in each Member State, and in its third paragraph the EU assumes the commitment to maintain an open, transparent and regular dialogue with these churches. The Cordoba Conference aims to contribute to the development of this framework for dialogue with the participation of religious leaders, together with representatives of society, believers and non-believers, in a debate on the religious arena in our societies.

The growing cultural and religious diversity of Western societies, as a result of migratory movements and the effects of globalisation, demands that we initiate a process of reflexion on coexistence, both within our own societies and in our relations with other societies and countries. Fear of the transformation of national identities generates tensions and provokes unease, defensiveness and attitudes of resistance to the integration of other cultural and religious traditions. Debates arising from the wearing of Islamic headscarves, the building of minarets, or issues involving freedom of expression, for example, are followed in our societies with growing interest, both by politicians and religious leaders, as well as by the citizens of our societies in general.

Delving deeper into rule of law and the principles and common values on which our democratic societies are based is the key to overcoming approaches that emphasise what divides us. A better understanding of our society and its diversity is essential to avoiding religious discrimination in its different forms, counteracting prejudice and mistrust, and building inclusive and open societies able to contribute to accepting diversity as a source of enrichment, and not of division and conflict.

At the same time, recognition of the rights of members of religious or cultural minorities sets us squarely before a moral philosophic debate that should be marked by civic prudence when defining who we are and what our model of coexistence is, without its implying a process of exclusion. Religious identities cannot, in any case, constitute a protection that justifies exceptions or alterations to the general democratic norms. We have to approach this challenge reflecting on the ethical and political values upon which we want to base such integration. This is why it is so important to have an education that favours integration and delves deeper into the basic values and principles of democratic societies. In this sense, the Cordoba Conference aims to pay special attention to the need to ensure the effective exercise of religious freedom, which includes the right to profess a religion or creed, to not have one, or to change one's religion, as well as the right to express this belief, alone or in community with others, in public or in private, through teaching, practice, worship, and observance.

Other fundamental rights directly related to religious freedom, such as freedom of opinion and of expression, equality between men and women, and those regarding religious education, will be the object of particular attention, in order to be able to successfully tackle the challenge of integration, strengthening the concepts of citizenship and democratic participation, and of equal rights and opportunities. Ensuring social cohesion and preventing radical attitudes and religious extremism will also be given special consideration.

Political institutions and governments are increasingly aware of the role that reciprocal tolerance between religions can play in esteem between cultures, and cooperation and peace in international relations. Here, the EU has shown its firm commitment to defend freedom of religion and belief in its external action, as well, and aims to be a key actor in combating every form of religious discrimination or intolerance. How to achieve this goal, and to combat such attitudes as Christianophobia, Islamophobia and anti-Semitism, as well as the necessary articulation of a position on the idea of defamation of religions, will be other issues to be discussed during the debates.

Moreover, the EU, its Member States and the Alliance of Civilizations are following with great interest the different interfaith dialogue initiatives that have been launched in recent years, and their potential contribution to mutual understanding and to finding common ground upon which to build more harmonious relations between individuals and communities. Such an approach contributes to overcoming mistrust, favours reconciliation in this area, and makes it possible to develop one of the main positive aspects of every religious confession.

The Alliance of Civilizations, as a platform for dialogue and cooperation and a catalyst for concrete projects and initiatives, offers an ideal framework for bringing positions closer together and overcoming divisions based on religious and cultural differences. As an action-oriented initiative, it focuses its activities on four priority areas: education, youth, the media and migration. Therefore, the Cordoba Conference is an exercise that aims to offer specific results that can be translated into initiatives and projects for action, related to, among other areas, education for diversity and transmitting intercultural competence.

6 USEFUL INFORMATION

Cordoba: cultural insight

The Córdoba Cathedral-former Mosque, considered the most important Islamic monument in the Western world, is undoubtedly one of the most fascinating works of art on the planet. Its veritable forest of columns, its two-toned archways and its stunning decoration, alongside Gothic, Renaissance and Baroque touches added in the Christian cathedral built inside the original mosque, create a one-of-a-kind architectural structure.

In addition to the famous Mosque-Cathedral, Córdoba is home to numerous other important monuments and buildings. A leisurely stroll through the city's old quarter takes visitors by the Alcázar de los Reyes Cristianos (the Fortress of the Christian Monarchs), with its stunning gardens, Arabic baths and the Mosaic Room, exhibiting the fabulous collection of Roman mosaics. Further along, in the narrow streets of the old Jewish Quarter, the lovely plasterwork of the city's Synagogue awaits. The Medina Azahara archaeological complex, the Córdoba style courtyards of the Viana Palace and the Posada del Potro, mentioned in the legendary literary work Don Quixote, are also well worth a visit.

While keeping its magnificent past very much alive, Córdoba is at the same time an innovative city and a focal point for culture and leisure. Perfectly adapted to the needs of today's world, the city offers modern infrastructure and services and a broad selection of hotels. Córdoba History meets the modern age in the heart of the Andalusia region, in the city of Córdoba. This thousand-year old centre, declared a UN World Heritage Site, is a living legacy of the many cultures that once made Córdoba their home. Córdoba boasts the unique claim of having been the capital of the Hispania Ulterior region of the Roman Empire and the capital of the Islamic Umayyad Caliphate. This splendour also extended to the intellectual world, as Córdoba was a hub for knowledge and study, producing famed thinkers such as Seneca, Averroes and Maimonides.
